Seeing a cockroach scatter when the kitchen light comes on is enough to make anyone pick up the phone. In the Roanoke Valley the Go to this site usual culprits are German cockroaches, which live indoors near kitchens and bathrooms, and larger American and smoky brown cockroaches, which often come in from mulch beds, crawl spaces and storm drains during humid weather. Perdue Exterminators handles all of them as part of its cockroach extermination service.

The species matters because each one calls for a different approach. German cockroaches breed quickly and hide in tight, warm spaces like behind refrigerators, under sinks and inside cabinet hinges. A small infestation can become a large one in a matter of weeks. Outdoor species tend to wander inside looking for moisture, so sealing entry points and treating around the foundation makes a bigger difference with them. Perdue's insect identification service means the treatment matches the roach you actually have.

Apartments, duplexes and older multi family buildings in Roanoke can be especially tricky, because roaches travel through shared walls, plumbing chases and electrical runs. Treating a single unit sometimes only pushes them next door. Landlords and property managers benefit from working with a company that understands how these buildings are put together and can coordinate treatment across units.
