One Law Firm for Business and Family Legal Needs in Omaha What happens when the person who owns the business is also the person writing the will? For many owners in Omaha, the line between company and family is thin. The same shares that fund payroll may also be the largest asset in an estate, and a decision about who runs the company next is often a decision about which child, sibling, or partner inherits what. That overlap is why some families https://zanerzdl302.timeforchangecounselling.com/business-litigation-attorney-omaha-commercial-disputes-and-contract-claims prefer working with one full-service law firm in Omaha rather than keeping business and personal legal matters in separate silos. Erickson | Sederstrom P.C., L.L.O. practices in both directions. On the business side, the firm handles corporate law, including entity formation, governance, mergers and acquisitions, and transition planning, along with employment law, real estate, and tax. On the personal side, its estate planning attorneys prepare wills, revocable trusts, durable financial powers of attorney, and health care directives, and they handle probate and trust administration, guardianship and conservatorship, and business and farm succession planning. Coordination is where the Law Firm benefit shows. Consider an owner of a family-run restaurant group with locations in Benson and Aksarben Village. A buy-sell agreement drafted by a corporate lawyer should match the estate plan drafted by an estate planning attorney. If the two documents point in different directions, heirs and remaining owners can end up in the kind of trust and estate dispute or shareholder disagreement that litigators are later asked to untangle. When the same firm is involved on both sides, the documents can be built to agree with each other from the start.

Tax planning ties the two sides together as well. The firm's tax practice covers business transactions, executive compensation, 1031 deferred exchanges, and succession planning, and its estate planning goals include maximizing wealth transfer, minimizing tax, and providing creditor protection. Estate planning shareholders Joseph C. Byam II, Daniel I. Dittman, and Andrew J. Huettner work in that area, while colleagues in corporate and tax matters can weigh in on how a transfer of ownership will be structured. The firm's emphasis on multi-generational client relationships reflects how often a single family returns over the years as children grow up, businesses expand, and plans need updating.
