

Why The Sash Design Matters More Than The Label

Both casement and double-hung windows are common in Fort Worth, and the right choice usually comes down to how you use the room, not just how the window looks.

A casement window is hinged on the side and swings outward with a crank.

Casements tend to seal tightly when they are closed because the sash presses into the frame.

An experienced window replacement company can confirm the cause with a quick inspection.

Where Sealing Performance Really Shows Up

Casements are often easier to clean on the inside, but the exterior side may still require reaching out or using a ladder depending on the elevation.

A few usage questions usually settle the debate: - Is there enough clearance outside for an outward-swinging sash?

If the priority is a classic appearance, simple operation, and flexibility in tight spaces, double-hung windows may be the better fit.
