Some travelers prefer to be met inside the terminal rather than at the curb, especially on a first visit, with heavy bags or after a long journey. At Milwaukee Mitchell this is something to arrange when you book, so the request should say clearly whether you would like meet and greet and who in the party should be met.

Milwaukee Fly Limo provides airport transportation to and from Milwaukee Mitchell International Airport with a late-model luxury SUV fleet. Its chauffeurs are professional, courteous, experienced and safe. On request, your chauffeur can park, meet you inside the terminal, help with your luggage and walk with you; meet and greet is arranged when you book and costs extra.

Decide whether meet and greet suits the trip

Meet and greet is most useful when the traveler is unfamiliar with the airport, is carrying several bags or would simply rather not search for the vehicle after landing. For a quick trip with only a carry-on, a curbside arrangement may be all you need.

Think about who is travelling. A visiting client, an older relative or a family with young children may appreciate being met inside, while a frequent traveler may prefer to walk straight out to the ride.

Include it in the original request

Ask for meet and greet when you make the booking, because it is arranged in advance and costs extra. Adding it at the last minute is harder to plan than including it with the flight, passenger and luggage details from the start.

Name the person who should be met, especially if you are booking on someone else's behalf. A clear passenger name and a working phone number help the meeting happen smoothly even in a busy arrivals area.

Describe the luggage honestly

Part of meet and greet is help with luggage, so describe what the traveler is bringing. Large cases, boxed items and equipment are worth mentioning so the chauffeur knows what to expect when they walk with the passenger to the vehicle.

If the traveler checks bags, mention that they will collect them at baggage claim. That detail affects how long the meeting takes and where in the terminal it makes sense to meet.

Confirm the meeting details

Read the confirmation to make sure meet and greet appears on the reservation along with the flight and passenger name. Use the meeting instructions supplied for your booking rather than assuming an arrangement from a previous trip.

Share those instructions with the traveler before they fly. A guest who knows they will be met inside, and by whom, can https://www.facebook.com/MilwaukeeFlyLimo step off the plane with confidence instead of wondering where to go.
