The most common pitch utilized by online fraudsters is that they can put a candidate's details directly into the official IELTS database without the prospect taking the test. They often describe this as a "database-registered certificate."

From a cybersecurity and administrative perspective, this claim is practically impossible for a number of reasons:

1. Multi-Tiered Security Protocols: The systems utilized by the British Council and IDP are heavily encrypted and managed by restricted administrative personnel. They are not accessible through external 3rd parties.
2. Biometric Verification: Official test centers capture a photograph, signature, and in some cases finger print information of the candidate on the day of the test. This biometric data is connected directly to the Test Report Form (TRF). A certificate bought online lacks this authenticated path.
3. Institutional Verification: Receiving organizations-- such as universities, visa processing centers, and employers-- do not merely rely on the paper or PDF certificate handed to them by a candidate. They log into the safe and secure IELTS confirmation portal to cross-check the TRF number directly versus the central database. If a rating is not genuine, it will instantly show as invalid or nonexistent.
