How to Plan a Relaxing Family RV Vacation in New Braunfels

Start with a Clear Plan, Not a Wish List

A family RV vacation sounds like pure freedom: the open road, a home on wheels, no hotel check-ins. But without a plan, that freedom can turn into a scramble for reservations, a search for a working dump station, and a lot of "are we there yet?" The key to a stress-free trip is to start early, think through the logistics, and match your expectations to the reality of traveling with kids. That means choosing a destination that offers both comfort and activities, like a family RV resort that caters to all ages.

New Braunfels, Texas, is a popular spot for RV travelers because it sits between Austin and San Antonio and offers easy access to the Comal and Guadalupe rivers, Schlitterbahn water park, and downtown dining and nightlife. The town also hosts Wurstfest, a family-friendly event that draws visitors from across the state. When you pick a location like this, you are not just booking a parking spot for your RV. You are choosing a basecamp for a week of outdoor recreation, family activities, and local exploration.

Book Early, Especially for Peak Seasons

Reservation dates fill up fast in popular areas. Many RV parks and resorts in New Braunfels start taking reservations months ahead for spring break, summer, and fall festival weekends. If you wait until a few weeks before your trip, you may find only scattered sites left, often with less desirable locations or no hookups. To avoid that, decide on your travel dates early and book your spot as soon as the reservation window opens. This is especially true if you want a site near the pool, a cabin lodging option, or a spot with full hookups for your rig.

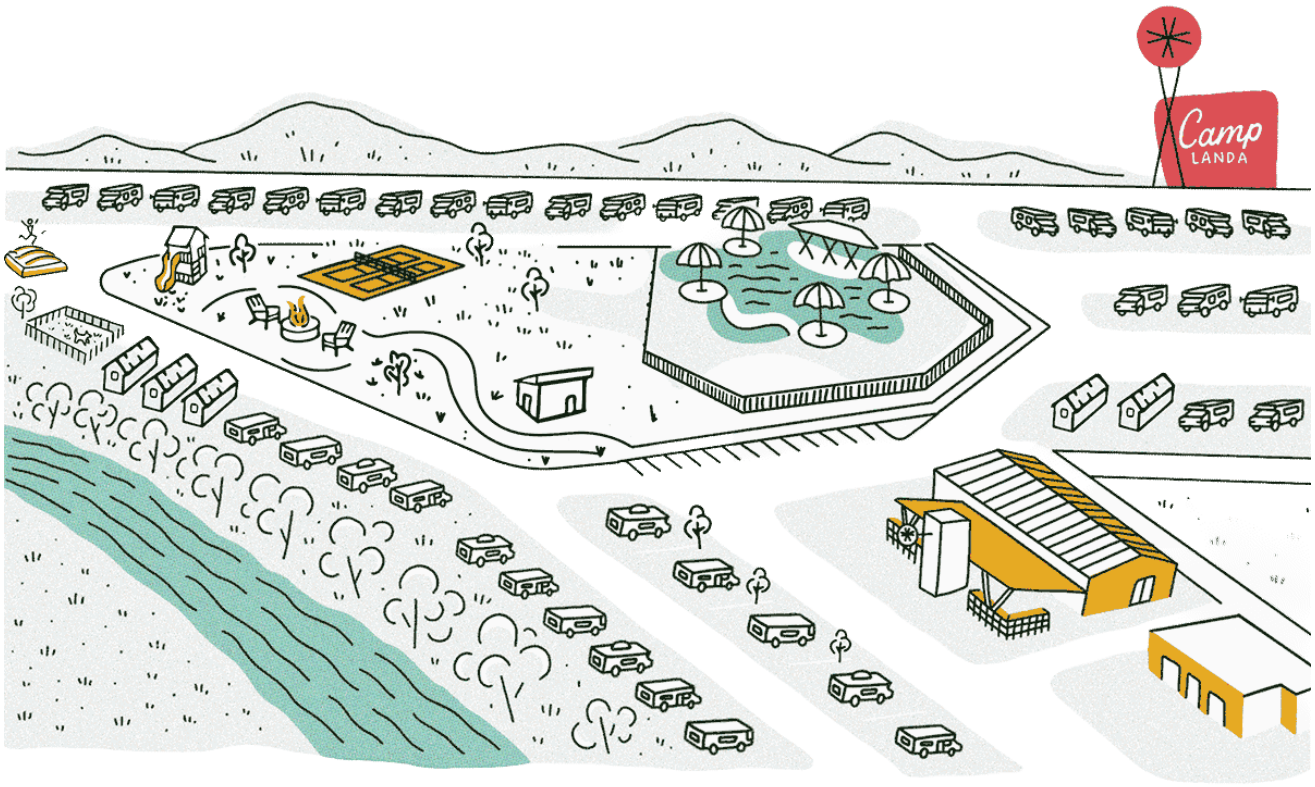

When you book, ask about campground rules: quiet hours, pet policies, visitor limits, and any restrictions on tent use or satellite dishes. Knowing these details ahead of time helps you pack appropriately and avoids surprises at check-in. Also confirm check-in and check-out times, as some parks have strict windows that can affect your travel itinerary.

Choose the Right Accommodation Type

Not all RV parks are the same. Some cater to long-term seasonal guests, while others focus on short-term vacationers. A family RV resort typically offers a mix of RV sites and cabin lodging, plus on-site amenities like a pool, playground, laundry, and sometimes a clubhouse or game room. If your family includes young children or older adults who prefer not to drive an RV, a cabin can be a comfortable alternative that still keeps everyone together on the same property.

When looking at options, consider the size of your RV and the length of the site. Some parks have pull-through sites for big rigs, while others only offer back-in spots that can be tight for a 40-foot fifth wheel. Also check the type of hookups: 30-amp vs. 50-amp electric, water, sewer, and sometimes cable or Wi-Fi. If you plan to stay for a week or more, having full hookups makes a big difference in comfort.

Pack Smart, Not Heavy

Space in an RV is limited, so every item you bring should earn its place. Start with the essentials: bedding, towels, kitchen supplies, toiletries, and a basic tool kit. Then think about what you will actually use during your stay. For a family vacation, that often means outdoor gear: chairs, a folding table, a campfire cooking set, and games like cornhole or a frisbee. Do not forget sun protection, insect repellent, and a first-aid kit.

One common mistake is overpacking clothes. You can do laundry at most resorts, so bring enough for a few days and plan to wash mid-trip. Also bring a small bag of rain gear and a few warm layers, even in summer. Texas evenings can be cool near the river, and a sudden thunderstorm is always possible.

For the kids, pack a few quiet activities for the drive and for downtime at the site: coloring books, cards, a tablet with downloaded movies, and a few toys that do not require a lot of pieces. The goal is to keep them entertained without cluttering the RV with stuff they will ignore after five minutes.

Plan Your Daily Activities, but Leave Room for Spontaneity

A packed itinerary is a recipe for exhaustion. Instead, pick one or two anchor activities per day and let the rest of the time be free. For example, you might plan a morning float on the Guadalupe River, an afternoon at the resort pool, and then a relaxed dinner at a local restaurant. Leave the evening open for a campfire, s'mores, or a walk around the property.

Check the resort's on-site amenities before you arrive. Some have planned activities like movie nights, crafts, or live music on weekends. These are great for meeting other families and giving the kids a safe place to play while you unwind. If you are staying near New Braunfels, you also have easy access to Schlitterbahn, which is a full-day outing, and to the historic downtown area with its shops and eateries.

Set Expectations for Everyone

Before you leave, talk with your family about what the trip will be like. Explain that the RV is smaller than home, that you will share space, and that everyone needs to help with chores like setting up the awning, doing dishes, or taking out the trash. This prevents resentment and builds teamwork. For younger kids, frame it as an adventure: they get to sleep in a new place, eat meals outside, and explore a new town.

Also set screen-time rules early. It is easy for kids to spend the whole trip on devices, but the whole point of an RV vacation is to be outside and together. Designate certain hours as "no screens" time, like during meals or in the evening after dinner. That way, everyone is present and engaged.

Check the Rig Before You Leave

A breakdown on the road can ruin a vacation fast. Before you pull out of your driveway, do a thorough check of your RV: tire pressure and condition, brake function, lights, generator, and all fluid levels. Test the propane system and make sure the fridge is cooling properly. If you are not comfortable doing this yourself, take it to a qualified technician a week before your trip. Also verify that your roadside assistance coverage is current and that you have the right tools and spare parts for common issues like a blown fuse or a broken water hose.

On the road, drive at a reasonable speed and take breaks every two to three hours. A tired driver is a dangerous one, and kids get restless. Plan rest stops at places with a playground or open space so everyone can stretch their legs.

Manage the Unexpected Gracefully

Even the best plans can go sideways. The weather might not cooperate, a reservation could get lost, or a child might get sick. The trick is to stay flexible. Have a backup list of indoor activities for rainy days: board games, a trip to a local museum, or a drive-through movie. If a planned outing falls through, do not panic. Sometimes the best memories come from unplanned moments: a quiet afternoon at the campfire, a game of catch, or a walk along the river.

Keep a positive attitude, and your family will follow your lead. If you stay calm and adapt, everyone else will too.
