

High Street runs through some of the busiest parts of Columbus, from the University District down through the Short North and into downtown. Moving into or out of a home near this corridor comes with unique logistical challenges that Columbus OH Movers need to plan for well before the truck arrives.

Traffic and Parking Along High Street

High Street sees heavy foot and vehicle traffic throughout the day, particularly near Ohio State's campus and the entertainment districts further south. Manifest Moving Columbus schedules moves in this area with extra buffer time to account for congestion and limited parking near many of the buildings that line the corridor.

Loading zones are often scarce or restricted to specific hours, so confirming parking permissions or permits in advance helps avoid delays once the crew arrives on site.

Building Access Near High Street

Many properties near High Street are older buildings converted into apartments, which can mean narrow stairwells, limited elevator access, or shared entryways with other tenants. A Moving Company in Columbus OH working in this corridor plans for these access points manifest movers in columbus oh ahead of time rather than discovering them on moving day.

Some buildings also require advance notice to building management before a move-in or move-out date, which is worth confirming early in the planning process.

Timing the Move Around Campus Schedules

Moves near the University District often see added congestion during move-in weekends at the start of fall semester. Manifest Moving Company recommends scheduling outside these peak windows when possible to avoid the heaviest traffic and parking competition in the area.

Evening or early morning time slots can also help avoid the busiest midday periods along commercial sections of High Street.

A Corridor That Requires Local Know-How

High Street's mix of commercial activity, student housing, and dense residential blocks makes it one of the more complex areas to navigate on moving day. Columbus OH Movers with direct experience in this corridor bring practical solutions that keep the process moving despite the busy surroundings.
